For the purpose of this contract the Juvenile Court Probation Division utilizes evidence-based services that are deemed such based upon criteria established by the National Institute of Justice, United States Office of Justice Programs. Through coordination with the grant funding agency, Georgia Criminal Justice Coordinating Council, the court selects the specific program treatment models to be used from a narrowly identified group of options made available. 7. What would be the impact on your department if this contract was not approved?

The in-home treatment services offered from the evidence-based programs would not be available for the Court to provide for children and families under court ordered supervision. These services play a critical role in minimizing the re-offense rates and out of home placements of juvenile offenders who have committed serious delinquent offenses. The services are uniquely applied to not only the children, but also to the parents/guardians, and/or caregivers in their natural home environment. This level of contact and family interaction plays a critical role in addressing the dynamic and complex issues that exist in the lives of children under court supervision. Services that require agencies to conduct their work functions within the homes and communities of the children is essential to the Probation Division's success and capacity to maximize community safety regarding children under the Division's supervision. This contract provides the resources to deliver such services. The Department would lose access to valuable, revenue-neutral resources vital in the effective rehabilitation and supervision of court-involved youth.
